CHHAN DINA

As a kid growing up with traumatize from war and landmines, Chhan Dina began to develop a unique obsession with her childhood experience which also inspired her arts in forms of painting and sculpture. At around 12-13 years old, she met a teacher named Ron who offered to teach her art & drawing before getting her parents' consents. She spent approximately 6-7 years before getting certificate and recognition from the teacher.

Dina then got an opportunity to host her very first exhibition at Java café which came to surprise that the majority of her artworks were sold. It inspired her more to pursue this passion and commitment in art. As time passed, Chhan Dina got even more recognition and started working for an NGO as a counselor for children's right victim. She consulted them about how they felt and what their feelings were, so she could express them rather through art. After years and dedication of hard work, Dina's masterpiece was recognized and shortlisted by UNDP to be exhibited in the United States.

BY CHHAN DINA

MAY - JULY 2021

One of her most powerful experience that inspired the art she's doing nowadays was once she had a chance to the experiment of land-mine clearing. After all, she found out that the war should be ended and shedding blood was evil-act that could not be tolerated.

Now she feels so blessed to be able to share with the world about war and what it looks like as well as its impact on civilization. She has turned to animals and nature for inspiration-seeking in order to share messages through to them.

All artworks are available for purchase and can be shipped to your home country. Please see our Ambassadors for more details.
